PUTNAM

Mr. and Mrs. John Cartwright and Mrs. Arthur Curtis of Providence were injured at 4:15 Saturday morning when the automobile in which they were en route from Washington, D. C., to their home city crashed into a tree at what is known as Dead Man's curve at the Averill home in the town of Pomfret. All were brought to the Day Kimball hospital in this city after they had been given treatment by Dr. S. E. Overlook of Pomfret, who was called when the accident happened.

Mrs. Curtis, who was riding in the rear seat of the car, was thrown out and was rendered unconscious. Both Mr. and Mrs. Cartwright suffered cuts from flying parts of the broken windshield, and Mr. Cartwright also has some fractured ribs. Mrs. Curtis recovered consciousness before the ambulance arrived to take the members of her party to the hospital, and later in the day was able to proceed to her home in Providence, while Mr. and Mrs. Cartwright remained at the hospital.

From statements obtained from persons who saw the injured almost immediately after the accident it was evident that it was due to the fact that Mr. Cartwright was suffering from exhaustion as the result of long continued driving. Apparently he did not notice the dangerous elbow turn, which is protected by one of the state highway department's ruby glass signs, and kept straight on and into the big tree, which has stood the shock of almost numberless automobile crashes during the past few years. The tracks left by the wheels of the car, which was badly damaged, do not indicate in the machine skidded or that it was out of control.

This sharp turn in the state highway between Williamstown and Putnam at the Averill place is an exceedingly dangerous place for motorists not familiar with the route, and accidents of serious nature continue to occur there with startling regularity, earning the little Dead Man's curve the spot.

The upward climb of raw cotton prices is looked upon in manufacturing concerns here as likely to cause a quick revival in the cotton manufacturing industry. Business already is reported as improved with a number of cotton mills in this immediate territory and the promise now seems good for an active fall and winter. The fact that cotton in advancing in price in sensational way is expected to start a lively buying spree in retail stores, for buyers realize that high prices for raw cotton mean an advance from present prices of finished cotton products. Business is improving, too, in woolen and worsted lines, giving promise that the winter season will not be near so hopeless or inactive as many had anticipated.

The number of good plays being turned in by both teams, but with Pequot on the mound, the big leaguers had everything their own way. The game was close and interesting up to the sixth inning, the Kaceys getting off to a good start in the initial chapter.
